NIH 2020 Virtual Seminar on Program Funding and Grants Administration

The National Institutes of Health (NIH) is offering a free virtual seminar on program funding and grants administration. This event is geared towards administrators, early stage investigators, graduate students, and others new to working with the NIH grants process.

This is a great, unique way for those who have been unable to travel to NIH Regional Seminars in the past, to get the information and answers to questions they seek. The sessions will take place in the afternoons (Eastern Standard Time) over four days, from Tuesday October 27 through Friday October 30.

Sessions are focused on the NIH grants process, programs and policies and allow for Q&A. Stick around Tuesday through Thursday for some “after hours” panel discussions on the future of the workforce as well, including enhancing diversity and mentoring. The full agenda is here. If you miss a session, don’t worry, recordings will be available the following day. And, there will be an On-Demand Library of additional presentations. So, feel free and drop in on sessions of interest and catch any you miss later.
